- Woman: Hello, Mr. Ishii.

Man: Hi, Emily. You are here for your club activities, right?

- Woman: That's right. It's Sunday today, but I came to school to practice basketball.
- Man: Are you going to practice in the afternoon, too?
- Woman: Yes, I am. So I have brought my box lunch, obento. Today, my host mother made my favorite food, inarizushi for me! How about you, Mr. Ishii?
- Man: I will have soba for today's lunch. There's a good soba restaurant near here, and they will bring lunch to me.
- Woman: Oh, it's a demae service, right?
- Man: Right. In Japan, soba restaurants and ramen restaurants usually have delivery services called demae. Does your host family use demae services?
- Woman: Yes. My host parents sometimes come home late. Then my host sister calls one of the restaurants near the house. That's useful. I think demae is a wonderful part of Japanese food culture.
- Man: A part of Japanese culture?
- Woman: Yes. There are some kinds of food that we can't make at home easily. Sushi is one example. We usually eat it at sushi restaurants. Of course, we can buy sushi at supermarkets. But I think sushi made by professional chefs is much better. If we use a demae service, we can enjoy such wonderful sushi at home with our family. That's really nice.
- Man: I see. For people in Japan, demae is not special, so I have never thought like that. Well, I hear some companies have started a new kind of food delivery service in some countries. Do you know anything about that?
- Woman: Yes. Now we can order food on our smartphones. Then one of the staff members of the delivery service company gets the food at a restaurant, and brings it to us. We can receive the food at any place: at home, at school, at our office, or even at a park. That kind of service has already started in some cities in Japan, too.

Man:	I will have soba for today's lunch. There's a good soba restaurant near here, and they will bring lunch to me.
Woman:	Oh, it's a demae service, right?
Man:	Right. In Japan, soba restaurants and ramen restaurants usually have delivery services called demae . Does your host family use demae services?
Woman:	Yes. My host parents sometimes come home late. Then my host sister calls one of the restaurants near the house. That's useful. I think demae is a wonderful part of Japanese food culture.
Man:	A part of Japanese culture?
Woman:	Yes. There are some kinds of food that we can't make at home easily. Sushi is one example. We usually eat it at sushi restaurants. Of course, we can buy sushi at supermarkets. But I think sushi made by professional chefs is much better. If we use a demae service, we can enjoy such wonderful sushi at home with our family. That's really nice.
Man:	I see. For people in Japan, demae is not special, so I have never thought like that. Well, I hear some companies have started a new kind of food delivery service in some countries. Do you know anything about that?
Woman:	Yes. Now we can order food on our smartphones. Then one of the staff members of the delivery service company gets the food at a restaurant, and brings it to us.
	We can receive the food at any place: at home, at school, at our office, or even at a park. That kind of service has already started in some cities in Japan, too.
