Woman☆ :

Last week, we visited the airport in our city in social studies class. Mr. Suzuki, one of the staff members, showed us around. First, he took us to the entrance. Many staff members helped passengers with the ticket machines and checked their tickets. Next, we went to another section. The staff members checked the passengers' bags with machines there. Through the machines, we could see things in the bags without opening them. Mr. Suzuki showed us how special dogs work at the airport, too. They smelled some bags and sat down when they found something dangerous. After that, Mr. Suzuki took us to the staff cafeteria. We ate special meals, usually served in airplanes, for lunch. We could choose one from Japanese, Chinese, French, and Italian options. I chose an Italian meal, and it had spaghetti and chicken in it. They were delicious. One of my friends, Koji, chose a Japanese meal. We were surprised because we saw sushi in his meal! In the afternoon, we went outside and looked at a small airplane. It was a real one, but it was not used because it was old. It was kept for local students' social studies classes. Mr. Suzuki showed us the control room of the airplane and told us about pilots' jobs. Then, I saw an old picture of an airplane on the wall. There was also a young man in the picture. I noticed that the man was Mr. Suzuki. I asked him about the picture. He said, "I was a pilot when I was young. I carried many passengers on this airplane. Now, I help local students and teach them about the airport." Hearing his story was the best part of the day.
